The Bloodline of the MacTavish Chiefs

Generation No. 1

1. King of Connacht Eochaidh¹ Muighmheadhoin¹.

Please keep in mind that the pedigree of Clan MacTavish reaching this far back in history is in ancient times. There are no existing birth records, death records, etc., with the exception of the ancient annals and chronicles. There were no computers, no CDs, no microfilm, etc. Not everyone could read and write. The name of the same person was many times spelled differently by different scribes. We have to depend on the Annals of the Four Master, Annals of Ulster, Annals of Tigernach, and these records often time disagree on the year of the event. Later published materials may have picked up on incorrect information, or may have found newer documentation. Clans may very well have changed pedigrees over the years, sometimes because they learned of factual information and sometimes because they simply took advantage to change the line of a Chief to what they felt was a loftier claim. (The Clan Campbell, for example, changed their published Chief's line between 1975 and 1992.)

I take this opportunity to caution you when reading history or pedigrees based on ancient documents or documents 1700, which may be written in another language (such as Latin) and call for translations.
The line of any chief of a Clan (just as our personal family research) becomes speculation and opinion as you go back before the year 1000. Some of us in our own personal family research may not even be searchable before the year 1700. Different historians have different opinions. If those opinions or writings are incorrect, the erroneous information may be written and rewritten for years.

Again, I caution you: I have put together the Chiefly line of Clan MacTavish with what I feel is correct from the information we have; however, research continues and I am always open to new documentation with sources cited.

He married Mael Muire\textsuperscript{28}, daughter of King of Scots Kenneth mac Alpin.  She died 913.

Notes for King of Ireland & Ailech Aedh Finlaigh:
A great victory was gained by Aedh, son of Niall, over the Gall Gaeidheala, in Gleann Fhoichle, where he made a slaughter of them, 854 (AF); the plundering and devastation of Meath by Aedh Finnliath, the son of Niall Caille, 859 (AF); Aedh Finnliath, son of Niall Caille, and Flann, son of Conang, went with the lord of the foreigners to plunder Meath, and committed great depredations there, 860 (AF).  Gormflaith, daughter of Donnchadh, son of Domhnall, was the mother of Aodh Finnliath, and Maolmuire, daughter of Cionaoth, son of Alpn, King of Alba, his wife, mother of Niall Glundubh (Keating, pg. 190).

The plundering and devastation of Meath by Aedh Finnliath, the son of Niall Caille.  (AF: M859.4)

CFIS, pg. 102-103

The Ui Neill were the great royal tribal dynasty of the North Gaels.  Having separated from the royal kinsmen, the Connachta, shortly after the career of their illustrious fifth century ancestor Niall of the Nine Hostages, they set out from a base in Sligo and soon (by the beginning of the sixth century) monopolized the Sacral High-Kingship of Tara, which for hundreds of years they alternated between their own two illustrious branches, the Northern Ui Neill and the Southern Ui Neill.

The Cineal Eoghan (a clan of the Northern UiNeill) were the Royal Clan of the North Gaels, associated with the High-Kingship of Tara.  Their original patrimony included the modern baronies of Raphoe and Irishowen in Donegal, but from their center at the great fort of Ailechin Irishowen, they soon spread through Derry and much of Tyrone as well.  (Tyrone, Gaelic "Tir Eoghain", the land of Eoghain, is named for them.)

The great O'Neill (O Neill) themselves descend from Niall Glundubh, High-King of Ireland, who fell fighting against the Vikings near Dublin in 919.  (Note:  Niall Glundubh was the son of Aed Finlaith and Mael Muire, daughter of Kenneth mac Alpin of Scotland.)  His grandson, Domhanall was the first to bear the dynastic name of O'Neill. There were the chief family of the Cineal Eoghain.

The MacLachlans, Lamonts, and MacSweens descend from Niall Glundubh, High-King of Ireland (thus descend from Aed Finlaith, King of Ireland and Kenneth mac Alpin, King of Scots, through Kenneth's daughter, Mael Muire). The MacSweens descend from Suighne, son of Dunsleve O'Neill, Lord of Knapdale. They descend from Anrothan O'Neill, the Ulster prince who in the first half of the eleventh century married the joint heiress of the Cineal Comghall (after whom Cowall is named) and their collateral kinsmen the Cineal nGabran of Knapdale. His two grandsons, Domnshleibhe (Dunsleve) and Domhnall (Donald) O'Neill are the ancestors of the branches of this clan. From Dunsleve, lord of Knapdale, are descended the MacLachlans, Lamonts, MacSorleys, MacSweeneys, MacQueens or MacSweens, and the MacEwens.

FM: After Aedh Finnliath, the son of Niall Caille, had been sixteen years in the sovereignty of Ireland, he died at Druim Inesclainn, in the territory of Conaille, on the 20th day of November

Notes for Mael Muire:
From the "Surnames of Scotland" by Professor George Black:
1. In Gaeldom, after the introduction of Christianity, a child born on a saint's day was baptized as the maol (later maol) - "Bald" or "toussured" (shaved head or very short hair) servant of devotee of that saint. Maol Moire or Maol Muire - was servant or devotee of "Mary". The daughter of Kenneth MacAlpin (Mael Muire) married Aed Finlaith (a King in Ireland). Colin Maol Maith was the father of Taus Coir, progenitor of Clan MacTavish.
2. Mael in early days was confused with mal, meaning "prince, chief" from the Old Celtic "maglos".
3. After the 12th century, maol was gradually displaced by gille "servant, lad."

KCS, pg. 45 - "Cinaed and his family were not living in a self-contained world, and the extent of their interests can be gauged from the marriage of his daughters, who husbands included powerful kings in northern Britain and in Ireland. One of his daughters was named Mael Muire (d. 913), she was the wife of two of the overlords of the Ui Neill confederation. Her first husband was Aed findliath mac Neill (d. 879) of Cenel nEogain, located in the extreme north of Ireland with their stronghold on the Irishowen peninsula. Aed was one of the most influential of all the Irish kings of his day, and although he occasionally used them as allies, was leader in the Irish resistance to the Vikings. The marriage of Mael Muire and Aed may have been intended by Cenel nGabrain and Cenel nEogain to end the hostilities of the eighth century and to promote a united effort against Viking attacks on Dal Riata and the northeast coast of Ireland. Alliances would be a standard way of Cenel nGabrain to respond to enemies. A second benefit would have increased prestige for the two dynasties with a marriage link between the two islands. More than prestige may have been involved, and the Ui Neill may have been supporting Cenel nGabrain against external foes and also against rivals among the Scottish dynasties. It may not be entirely coincidental that Cinaed's family lost control of the kingship about the time of Aed's death and regained it after Mael Muire's second husband, Flann Sinna mac Mael Choluim (d. 916), became the unchallenged head of the Ui Neill confederation and Aed's successor in preeminence in the north of Ireland

Cinaed had another daughter whose marriages were equally important for the fortunes of the Cenel nGabrain. Her Christian name is not given, and her existence is known through references to her son, Eochaid, who would reign briefly in the late ninth century. In the Scottish Chronicle accounts of Eochaid's accession, his tie to Cinaed macAlpin is explicitly stated: "Eochaid the son of Rhun, king of the Britons, grandson of Cinaed by his daughter." (Note: The Annals of Ulster state: "Maria, daughter of king of Scotland, m. King of England, d. 1118.")

Notes for Suibhne Ruadh:
Maternal Grandfather of Taus Coir (progenitor of Clan MacTavish). The strongholds of the family of Swene were the Castle Sween in Knapdale and Castle Skipness in Kintyre. (Castle Sween - Collins Encyclopaedia of Scotland, edited by John & Julia Keay, pg. 146: On the south shore of Loch Sween, this is probably the oldest castle in the west of Scotland. Named from Suibhne O'Neill, it may be 11th century.) (Keating, "The History of Ireland", Book I-II, pg. 27)

In the time of Suibhne Ruadh, Scotland was not as we know it today nor as it was during the time of Robert the Bruce, when he was crowned King of Scotland. There was not one Scotland united under one King. There were various areas with their own rulers (such as Somerled in Argyll, while Malcolm III ruled in Dunkeld).

In geo-political terms, mainland Argyll belonged not to the heart of the Scottish kingdom, but rather to the maritime world of the western seaboard from the eleventh to the late thirteenth century. "Kingdom of the Isles, 1100-1336," R. Andrew MacDonald, 1988, pg. 12

So serrated is the coastline of rgyll that no part of the interior lies more than about twelve miles from either the open sea or a sea-loch. "Kingdom of the Isles, 1100-1336," R. Andrew MacDonald, 1988, p. 16

The western seaways had served as a line of communication for centuries before the Vikings arrived to dominate them. It has been demonstrated that the shorelands of the Irish Sea were united under a single cultural stimulus, and that the were linked with lands even further abroad, from at least three millennia before the Christian era. "Kingdom of the Isles, 1100-1336," R. Andrew MacDonald, 1988, p. 18

The culture of the western seaboard in the Middle Ages was a maritime one. For the inhabitants of Argyll and the Isles, the sea was not a barrier, but a link, a line of communication, and a means of efficient transportation. Few of the events which occurred in the western seaboard between 1098 and 1336 were not dictated by its essentially maritime orientation. The northern and western Scottish coasts were controlled by a people whose outlook was seaward, whose way of life was dominated by the sea, and whose political structures were based on sea power. "Kingdom of the Isles, 1100-1336," R. Andrew MacDonald, 1988, p. 19

33. Unnamed daughter of Suibhne Ruadh (Castle 25 Sween) (Suibhne 24 Ruadh, Duinsleve/Duinsleibhe (descent of the 23 Sweenes), Aed Alainn an 22 buirrche, Anraddan/Anrothan 21, Aedh 20, Flaitheberatch an 19 trostain, Muirchertach 18 midigh, Domnall 17 Armagh, Muirchertach na cochall 16 croicenn, Niall 15 Glundubh, Aedh 14 Finlaigh, Niall 13 Caille, Aedh 12 Oirdnidhe, Niall 11 Frasach, Fergal 10, Maelduim 9, Maelfithig 8, Aedh 7 Uairdhnach, Domnall 6 Illeagalach, Muirschertach 5, Muiredach 4, Eoghan 3, Niall of the Nine 2 Hostages, Eochaidh 1 Muighmheadhoin) was born Bet. 1070 - 1085. She married Colin Maol Maith 44, son of Gillespig/Archibald and the Evah.

Notes for Unnamed daughter of Suibhne Ruadh (Castle Sween):
The birth of Taus Coir is approximated around 1100, therefore the date of the mother is not an absolute time.

The daughter of Suibhne Ruadh, mother of Taus Coir m. Colin Maol Maith. After the death of her husband (Colin MacDuine/Campbell) in 1110, it is believed that the daughter of Suibhne Ruadh was given to the Chief of Clan MacLachlan in marriage and that Taus and Iver were raised within that marriage.

Notes for Colin Maol Maith:
From the "Surnames of Scotland" by Professor George Black:
1. In Gaeldom, after the introduction of Christianity, a child born on a saint's day was maptized as the mael (later maol) - "Bald" or "tonsured" (shaved head or very short hair) servant of devotee of that saint. Maol Moire or Maol Muire - was servant or devotee of "Mary". The daughter of Kenneth MacAlpin (Mael Muire) married Aed Finlaith (a King in Ireland). Colin Maol Maith was the father of Taus Coir, progenitor of Clan MacTavish.
2. Mael in early days was confused with mal, meaning "prince, chief" from the Old Celtic "maglos".
3. After the 12th century, maol was gradually displaced by gille "servant, lad."

The Campbells claim that Colin Maol Maith married the neice of King Alexander, although there is no written record found anywhere other than in the Campbell genealogy. Considering the important positions that Colin held, the fact the this is supposedly a neice of the King, and that Colin Maol Maith died saving King Alexander, one would expect to see this evidence somewhere. However, it is difficult to find evidence this far back. Some historians heavily question the existence of this neice and the marriage.

Caolin Maol Maith was: Justice Generall, Mr. Household to the King, and Lieutenant of the Isles.

"The rebels in the Western Isles being informed at a time that the king ws at Dunstaffnage, they made such a sudden onset upon him that he could in no way escape had it not been by the advice of Colin Maol Maith, who advised that the king should leave that place with a few men in countrymen's habits, whilst he should personate the king by putting on his royal habit to persuade the rebels that the king was still there in person, which had the desired effect. But Colin Maol Maith, with all the forces the king left with him, were cut in pieces upon the spot, who did not fall unrevenge, for the whole ringleaders of the rebels were also slain upon the spot."

One would think that the Campbell children would become wards of the King and given titles at that point. However, the Campbells would not hold the title of Duke until after Culloden in the 1740s.

Children of Unnamed Sween) and Colin Maith are:
+ 34 i. Taus/Tau/Tause 26 Coir, born Bet. 1100 - 1110 in Argyle, Scotland.

Excerpts from Chapter V:

From Tavish Coor there are descended, it is held, the three families of Mactavish of Dun-ArdRigh in Knapdale, of Scannish in Cowall, and of Rudal or Rua-duilh in Galsserie. Tavish Coor or his immediate descendants, settled on the edge of the well known Moss of Poltalloch, and at the foot of a high hill, the second highest in Knapdale, called Dun-ArdRigh, from the presence at its base of the home of MacTavish. Every person travelling by the Crinan Canal when passing through Dunardry lock is within two hundred yards of the site on which once stood this castle. Rudal, within whose former limits is the historic Dun-Add, once the capital of the Dalriad Kings of Argyll, is a few miles to the east, the present Rudal mill being on the roadside and nearly opposite Dun-Add, but the Rudal farm is a little more easterly. This farm has always been regarded as the march or boundary between Lorne and Kyntry. Scannish has probably anglicised its name and owing to this disguise we are unable to state its locality in Cowall.

Of the families of Rudal and Scannish, we know nothing. As younger sons or brothers of the Chief, they would have no special position in the history of the Clan, but rank simply as Duine Uasail and gradually cease to be of any special note. Their descendants would descend lower and lower in the tribal scale, until finally, they would be merged in the general membership of the Clan, all of whom were "gentlemen". We concern ourselves therefore in this sketch, only with the descendants of Tawes of Dun-ArdRigh, respecting whom we yet know so little.

When or by whom the Castle of Dun-ArdRigh was built, we know not, but find if marked on maps like that of Pont, 1634, as a castellated building, and named simply Dun-ArdRigh. From the line of the present Canal, the estate extended towards the ancient village of Kilmartin but we cannot define its extent northward or southward. Having been included in the forfeiture of the Earl of Argyll in 1686, - sub-feudation not being legal, its superiority must have been vested in him, while, as in 1704 it was restored to Duncan Mactavish it is evident, apart from later mentions, that its legal ownership was in the Mactavishy. By degrees, the descendants and adherents of Tavish Coor spread throughout Knapdale and northern Kyntyr, but especially over Kilmartin, Glasserie, and Kirkmichael districts. Everywhere in that locality, one met with Mactavishes, and the little churchyard of Kirkmichael-Glasserie, has a large portion of its soil rich with the dust of generations of the Clan. The Chiefs were buried by themselves. A few miles north of Dunardy, is Kilmartin, with a church whose history goes back to remote antiquity. In its churchyard are some seven flat slabs side by side, several of them covered with Celtic sculptures, while another is the cover of a small kist - said to contain a recent interment - with an inscription, which is illegible, the lichens having rooted themselves in the very matter of the stone. The lid of this kist is permanently shut by the building on it of a small cross of brown stone, placed by the family of a late representative of this branch, the late Sheriff Mactavish of Campbellton, with the inscription, - "The burying place of the Mactavishes of Dunardry."

On two of the large stones are inscriptions in Gaelic or Latin letters, but so weather - and we regret to add, so foot-worn, by the heedless tramping across the rest place of the dead, as to be no longer readable. On another, is a life sized high relief effigy of a mail clad warrior, with the high pointed helmet and armed with the long two handed sword. In comparatively recent times, some one has cut in roughly carved letters, the word MACTAVISH across the chest of the warrior, but on none of them is there any such inscription as might indicate the name of the warrior at rest below or the date of his burial. The last of the slabs is one of considerable beauty. It is divided into three panels or compartments with well preserved sculptures of men and animals, but whose significance we are unable to give. This owes its preservation to its having been covered for a couple of feet by soil that has only lately been removed. (Principal Campbell, author, says that the graves of Taus and Iver are side by side in Kilmartin Churchyard, although not known where located today.)

During the couple of centuries that were passing, we hear but little of the Mactavishes. We are dependent on tradition for mention of the family, and this time, we hear of a great tragedy, which affected the whole history and social position of the Clan. Had nothing occurred to break up the family unity, the Clan might still have had a recognised place in the history of the Nation, but broken in two, it had no chance of being or of doing what might once have been possible. The tradition to which we now refer, is that at some unmentioned period, but apparently about the close of the Fourteenth century, a quarrel broke out between two brothers, the sons of the then Chief. The ground of the quarrel is not stated but the dispute was decided by force. The elder brother was slain in the fight, when the survivor known as Tavish Mor or Tavish the Great, whether in reference to his physical or his mental qualities is not said, accompanied by a small band of followers, left the ancestral home of Dun-ArdRigh and went northward seeking a home in new territory, of which we shall speak again. The main body of the Clan remained at Dun-ArdRigh - and for the present, we follow their history - its head possessing the Chieftainship. The section that followed Tavish Mhor seems, to have retained an organized existence equally with that of Dun-ArdRigh and to have continued its existence for nearly as long a period among the Families of Scotland, though to it through the forfeiture of 1747, of the Fraser Estates came the inevitable dispersion......

The store continues in Dr. Mathews manuscript.
Kingdom of the Isles, 1100-1336 by R. Andrew McDonald, 1996: Medieval Argyll was much more extensive than the modern region of the same name; it embraced the whole area from the Mull of Kintyre and the Clyde in the south to Lock Broom and beyond in the north. The seventeenth-century Book of Clanranald several times refers to Argyll as encompassing the lands from Dumbarton to Caithness, or from Dingwall to the Mull of Kintyre. This vast and rugged region with its extensive coastline was commonly divided into two areas: North Argyll, the region between Elenelg and Loch Brook, which pertained to Moray and Ross in the Middle Ages, and South Argyll, stretching from Knoydart to the Mull of Kintyre, known as 'Ergadia que pertinent and Scociam' ('Argyll which pertains to Scotland'). The eastern boundary of Argyll was the natural barrier of the mountain range known as Drumalban, the Spine of Britain. The twelfth-century tract De Situ Albanie referred to it as 'the mountains which divide Scotia from Argyll', and its use to distinguish the west from the central and eastern regions dates back to the time of St. Columba. These mountains cut off the Atlantic coast from the rest of Scotland, and throughout this period, travel from Argyll and the Isles by sea to Norway was easier than the overland route through heavily forested mountains, to the Scottish court at Edinburgh, Perth, or Stirling.

This vast coastal region has been historically divided into several distinct regions: Kintyre and Knapdale, Cowal, Lorn, Ardnamurchan and Morvern. Kintyre, along with its northern link of Knapdale, forms a long, narrow peninsula jutting south from Crinan for about fifty-five miles to its southern-most extremity, the Mull of Kintyre. Because the sea-loch of West Loch Tarbert penetrates to within a mile of East Lock Tarbert, Kintyre is all but an island, which means that its history is closely linked with that of the western seabord, rather than with the mainland.

Notes for Unnamed Chief:
There is here a period of time in which we do not have documented evidence of the descendants. In genealogy research, it is very common to assume that there are 3 generations in 100 years. With no documentation and working under that assumption, I have inserted three "unknown" ancestors. It is possible that there are more or less ancestors during this time frame. Research continues.

Generation No. 40

Notes for Eoin (John) MacTavish:
The Clan Tavish by Niall Campbell, 10th Duke of Argyll

Eoin MacTavish of Dunardrie, in 1643, was served heir by Argyll to his great-grandfather, Patrick, son of Dougall MacTavish of Donardrie. He is the first chief whose wife has been discovered, for on 7th Agusut 1651, he married a certain Marion Campbell, to whom he gives Liferent and who in 1685 was a widow cruelly robbed by the Atholl men. On 18th November, Eoin testifies that on oath at Inverary before the Marquis of Argyll, his son was killed at Stirling fight and lost his arms, so the Marquis rears him with a musket, a sword, a belt and bandelier, for which he grants a receipt. Eoin died in 1664 or before, leaving issue.
